Now that you've been hit over the head with the news, let's get down to business. I've got something to share with you, something you need very much right about now.

First you have to get past your emotional reaction. Let's concentrate on the positive aspects of your healing. I am not a doctor. Everything I know about chemotherapy has come from my clients. I've asked them to share their feelings about what they have experienced. I have listened and learned.

There is one major truth that outshines all others. A positive attitude brings positive results. Taking time now to understand the process and your options clearly, objectively, with an open mind, will assure successful results. Do yourself this favor.

I realize the huge role hair plays in our image of ourselves. So I understand that now, of all times, you need to look like yourself. When you look good, you feel good. I'm going to explain everything you need to know about wigs to make it through this sensitive time Looking Like You.

One of the most satisfying results of my work has been watching so many pleased clients confidently stride out of the salon wearing a smile (and their new hair replacement), looking and feeling so much better than when they arrived.

Many came to me because they saw someone in their support group or at a clinic wearing a beautiful wig I had personalized. Among those who have sought my help are many oncologists and other specialists. Impressed by my simplified explanation of this complex chemical process and my approach to hair replacement, they continue to refer their patients to our shop because of the excellent results my staff and I consistently achieve.

You need to be comfortable with the idea that you become an illusionist, during this time. The illusion is you. I have worked closely with leading wig manufacturers developing innovations designed specifically with you in mind.

Throughout each chapter, and in a gallery at the end, I've included a sampling of today's latest styles. These have special features you need for your comfort and security. You will learn about basic concepts of design and construction to help you find the perfect wig for you.

With all the how-to's of care, helpful hints, and answers to the most frequently asked questions, you'll feel like an expert! Once your own hair has started growing again, we'll talk about the transition from illusion back to reality.

“Read all the way through.
You need to know all of this,
every word.”

Read all the way through. You need to know all of this, every word. You should understand the entire process before you go any further. I've given this consultation a thousand times. It works again and again and it's going to work for you!
